Section I: The Centaurs

Centaurs are asteroids with several properties in common, one of which is that they travel from deep regions of our solar system to within the orbit of Jupiter. They are similar to comets but are larger. The first Centaur discovered was Chiron in the year 1977. Chiron was first thought to be a kind of planet, but is now considered a Centaur by most astronomers.

Now you might be thinking "Oh, gosh! More teensy things to consider in my horoscope. Doesn't the chart have enough going on as it is?" Consider that astrologers use one planet, Venus, to describe the vast areas of love, art, and beauty in our lives. The asteroids add depth and detail to the astrological analysis, enabling us to see more specific issues.

When the first Centaur, Chiron, came to our attention, he was greeted with mixed feelings. Some, considering this body very difficult to define (planet, asteroid, comet?), saw it as a nuisance. Others remained sure of his importance. It would appear that those astrologers possessed a vision of better things to come.

Ultimately, Chiron emerged as a potent teacher, healer, shaman leading us all through previously unremovable wounds - whether psychological or spiritual. His urging to fully invest the spirit in the body and involve oneself in life now stands as the leading wave of soulful healing. His demonstration of the essentiality of relationship between body and spirit now stands accepted, intact and most importantly, significant in all of our personal healing efforts.

Now Chiron has five named Centaur siblings: Pholus, Nessus, Asbolus, Chariklo and Hylonome. Suggestions exists for yet another named body, Pylonor, which is awaiting astronomical nomenclature protocols. Ultimately, all the other Centaurs will receive names as well.

Each Centaur appears with a solution to a common social malady of today's complicated society and associated psychological and psychic backlash. The integration of these bodies provides us with simple, consciousness-oriented ceremonies and healing techniques to enhance our coping skills. The Centaurs restore our sensibilities - literally, our ability to use our senses, emotions and body perceptions - ranging from an instinctive nose to chill bumps - thereby increasing our humanness. In a time when the array of electronic communication and technology decreases our sentient involvement in our lives, the Centaurs appear to restore our senses and sensibilities.

The Centaur clan offers valuable attributes in our everyday life, psychological healing and spiritual growth. Consider the powerful remedies offered by these bodies:

- Chiron - healing psychic wounds of rejection, restoring spirit to body
- Pholus - overcoming substance abuses, restoring peacefulness of spirit, use of daily ritual
- Nessus - defining need and want in money and relationships with healthy balance
- Asbolus - development of and use of full intuitive faculties
- Chariklo - assessing personal boundaries, both psychologically and energetically
- Hylonome - healing grief and regret

As you welcome the primal gathering of Centaurs into your horoscope, you will enjoy enhanced awareness of emotion, passion for life, quest for purpose and sensorial reactions to all situations. Saddle up and ride these tiny, yet potent, bodies, for a celestial journey to self understanding, compassion and well-being. Enjoy!

Chiron

For those people feeling rejected by parents and carrying that banner throughout life, relief is near. Should you be sensing wounds that simply will not leave no matter what is done, a solution stands near. And if feelings of displacement, alienation and disconnection prevail within yourself, the healer has arrived. Soon, with use of the essence of this relatively new healer, Chiron, the way clears for a stronger sense of self with spirit invested in body. This sense of self works to reestablish healthy relationships with others.

Chiron was the wounded healer, or the healer who wounds. His mode of healing works to bring up the hidden issues, overcome denial, offer penance, then go on in greatness. He was one of the immortals, with a god as a father who rejected the son. The mother disowned him because of his ugliness (half man, half horse). With no place to go, Chiron became an avid learner studying with the great ones, devouring all knowledge. Accidentally wounded at an event using ceremonial wine unceremoniously, his immortality became a liability as the healer could not heal his own wound. He persisted in life feeling pain that he, the healer, could not heal. His pain includes parental rejection, unworthiness and in today's terms, soul loss.

Chiron opted to end the eternal pain at all costs. He took a voluntary task in the underworld, coming out with the ability to ascend to the heavens as granted by Zeus (Jupiter). He represents being able to take on healing directly, clearly and intently. He symbolizes our willingness to go into the caves of consciousness and examine our nature. He grieves, then heals. This powerful healer comes before us encouraging the clearing of all things within our psyche. After this occurs the path opens for our spirits to fully fuse with our physical being.

Chiron Square Mercury, Orb: 0 deg. 59 min.

It goes both ways with your verbal exchanges. In as much as others seem to possess an amazingly sharp ability to slice to the bone of your doubts, you can do the same. This unintentional verbal barrage would be better intercepted sooner rather than later. If you think it through, the images of Chiron being the healer who wounds become impeccably lucid. You cut to the chase, call it as you see it and agitate the other person into self reflection and healing. Meanwhile, even on your best day, others possess the ability to derail your mental train with similar verbal phrases slung your way. The process remains one of disciplining the mind. Define the thoughts that impede you and put them in your recycle bin. Remember to empty after each entry. Clarify thoughts that feed you. Use only the thoughts that nurture you. Embellish them. Consider these affirmations with the intent of intelligence. Your most important dialogue becomes conscious and clear. That would be the inner dialogue, of course.

Chiron Conjunct Jupiter, Orb: 1 deg. 34 min.

Face it. You are a teacher. Teach what you know. Should one of your life lessons be in current progress, know the limits. If you are asked to do that class concerning that lesson, qualify your information. Or don't do the class. This is a not a matter of teaching what you need to learn. That is a flawed path. This is a matter of certainty. Should your money be in weird flux, decline to counsel in fiscal matters. Be the wise mentor. Know your lesson plans. But also know others will seek you out prior to your sense of readiness. A fine line of discernment of knowing lives here. What do you know? Simple. What beliefs do you carry in life with every action you take? That's what you know. Receiving what you desire to absorb from the ultimate expert, in a one to one interaction, fills in all remaining uncertainties. Of course, as soon as this lesson is understood, you'll be expected to return the favor. Altering beliefs changes troubled minds. Mental acuity offers insight.

Chiron Trine Neptune, Orb: 0 deg. 08 min.

You have a free pass to travel into the heavens whenever you want. Your consciousness drifts in and out of your being without the need for any passport. Simply you get to take your attitudes and emotions on refreshing spirit driven vacation many times a day. This way you stay invigorated, attentive and involved in your life. While you're traveling take some time to notice directives, ceremonies and healing rituals that come to mind in those lofty, inspired places. It would be recommended that these be brought back with you. Should you explore the full extent of these insightful gifts, you'll find your involvement in the real world getting easier. Thus you need less of the escapist type of reverie. Your spirit driven retreats into the ethers maintain more of defined quality. They, too, become more powerful. You probably are beginning to realize that you can create awesome incantations, chants, songs, prayers, affirmations and ceremonies for yourself and the rest of the planet. Raise your spirit. Raise your voice. Raise the rafters.

Chiron Opposition Pluto, Orb: 3 deg. 06 min.

The teachers come to you. Usually you can't remember asking for one. But nonetheless, here's the big kahuna and with a huge bag of tricks. Come on down and play the teacher says. Like you have a choice. You are fully aware no real option exists here. This teacher might even tell you they were sent to you. They don't ask. They tell. Go for it. If you don't, the sink of life clogs forcing a call to the ultimate plumber. This process seems like a broken record. Bear in mind previous teachers/healers/mentors do not abandon you. They simply plop you down in a place where the next one can find you. This aspect actually contains many blessings. Whenever a life difficulty becomes insurmountable, the teacher with the greatest expertise in the problem area magically appears. Part of the good karma profile, the tasks before you require constant, intentional work. The benefits come in the form of metamorphic transformations as if a million butterflies store their magic in your spirit. Next thing you know, you'll have at your fingertips the ability to pop open the tightly woven cocoons of others.

Chiron Quincunx True Node, Orb: 1 deg. 24 min.

When you find yourself getting just a bit testy with others, it's time for necessary introspection. The urge to judge, condemn and be unnecessarily harsh with others comes from a subconscious awareness of an out of sorts part within your spirit. Internally, something requires rectification. It's not always you that's wrong, though, in case that's how it feels. It's you that stands big enough to make any necessary adjustments within yourself for full and complete body/spirit balance. Shedding the ego remains a theme of your life. This shedding, though, comes from realizing the ego's reactions, savoring them and releasing them. While these adjustments might seem huge at the beginning, they're not. Rain storms always look darkest when the Sun shines on them. Show others the way of fluidity in change by gearing up and creating initial momentum.

Pholus

Perhaps a sense of listlessness in life encourages one to eat too much or too little. Maybe even taking on alcohol or other substances as a substitute for contentment becomes the way one copes. The Centaur Pholus appears to remind us of what it is that actually lies beneath these physical urges to compensate or over-compensate in life.

Pholus appears at just the right time to remind people of the needs of spirit. While he signifies everything about food and drink, he also stresses the idea that all things intending to nurture our beings remain powerful ceremonies. Pholus indicates diet patterns, especially methods of cooking and even the type of diet including carnivorous or vegetarian ways. His attitude toward drink, most especially alcohol, insists that it be offered ceremoniously. The custom of toasting with wine (or whatever is the alcohol of choice) comes from Pholus. Blessing food symbolizes a Pholus thought. He represents use or abuse of all physical substances, alcohol being the most significant of his concerns.

Ultimately Pholus reminds us of the need to fill our daily lives with those things that are good - and only good - for us. He establishes awareness of necessary limits and requirements. He goes even further in that he offers the reminder (and often a stern one) that your daily routine must include your spiritual drill: saying grace, toasting, a daily meditation, smudging, ceremonial cleansing or whatever comes under his wise and watchful eye. Should things feel out of sorts, offer simpler, reverent acts every day. Watch the restlessness subside and the sense of well-being begin.

Pholus Square Mars, Orb: 0 deg. 04 min.

Knowing better impedes no action. The instinctive part of you either doesn't believe that consequence follows a simple transgression - or doesn't care. Transgression implies going against any well-founded sense of inner knowing. You either go against this to prove you possess greater will than that of Cosmic Law, to fortify your personal sense of magic or simply because your urges exceed reason. Regardless, should any consequence come your way, no fair grumbling. Sometimes these episodes of going against the grain try to trick your ego into accepting the agenda of spirit. For instance, promoting the free flow of wine with an almost special someone might reduce your reserves that block pursuing a fuller embrace. You fall into that intimate thing instead of the love thing. While this is not recommended action, the thrust here asks you to carefully and deliberately use every act in life as a ceremony of honoring the great desires of your spirit. Your sole concern is that of letting your loving soul guide all your instincts. With that, no cave-ins of consciousness need be feared.

Pholus Trine Asc., Orb: 2 deg. 34 min.

People flock to you like some sort of guru or something. Gosh, where does that come from? Even the simplest afternoon tea you lay out turns into a "let's solve the struggles of humanity" session. People chat about all this stuff, while you listen, amazed. Then, the tide turns - so do the heads in the room - and all to face you. They ask not only what you think, but what you'd do if you were in that situation. That's heavy. Lighten it up. Restore the celebration. Focus on the sense of relief that comes when following the path of resolution. Point out that joy follows. See, you just did the guru thing. You elevated, enlightened and lightened the environment. That's what people come to expect from you. Honor the fact that when you've got your own soul felt thing going, people breathe a sigh of relief as soon as you enter the room. In fact, why not breathe that in yourself? It restarts the healthy circulation of the air supply. All stale smells filter out without being masked by a cheap green pine tree thing. The smell of real nature - spirit nature - permeates the air.

Nessus

It's been said that money and sex are only important when you don't have them. Whether or not this is true is up for grabs. But what we can derive from this saying is that two issues of importance to the human spirit are money and sex. In fact, under extreme circumstances, people can be observed demonstrating the best and worst of human characteristics with these issues at hand. Witness the excited glow of a lottery winner. Look hard to see the collapsed aura of a person dealing with insurmountable debt. Examine the fractured aura of a lover rejected for a younger more attractive partner. Consider the radiant glow of someone newly in love. Watch what happens as people discover that they simply cannot live without a certain thing, economic status or the love person in their life. These issues receive impeccable clarification from the Centaur Nessus.

Nessus refers to a level of desire that goes beyond need. Wanting more, coveting or even qualities of lust fall under his influence. Nessus refers to the two juicy areas of life: monetary matters and intimate relationships. He seeks out the things you unconsciously want but might not be able to articulate. He notes those things you feel you do not deserve, yet crave. First, though, he uncovers urges and desires that may not feel comfortable to your "I am a good person," belief system. But he transforms all negatives if given a chance. He works with you to ensure you enjoy the bounty of your relationship with healthy abundance. Nessus observes your financial state in life, then offers his position on what would really make you feel good in an unlimited way. Ultimately, Nessus' balance would be to have enough money not to need more and not so much that it consumes your time and thoughts.

Nessus is a powerful healer. He insists that you open yourself to the realm of sensuality in life. Smell flowers, taste food, feel the air, enjoy touch, savor success and feel everything fully. He provides the ultimate in healing issues of converting poverty to abundance. He brings about the exchange of lust, shame and guilt for healthy physical enjoyment of life, whether explored intimately with another or in one's relationship with the Creator.

Nessus Sextile Venus, Orb: 2 deg. 19 min.

The ideas of how to get what you want come easily. In fact, these insights might seem insignificant. But bear in mind that inspirations dealing with abundance agendas - both in romantic adventure and financial enterprise - need full and complete use. This ensures you do not thumb your nose at Universal Understanding. When you put these ideas in play, life gets even easier. For you, the evolution in work and the associated economic compensation readily improves. State the need, mean it, then get it. Similarly, when you use the images you receive in love matters, that too, becomes easier and nearly effortless. Others observe the simplicity of your life. They might respond less than favorably. It's just envy. Should this occur the ideas you use just need to be shared. Your expertise becomes known. Your ideas receive dispersion, which is part of the plan after all. Your Nessus job is the unenviable one of leading people effortlessly across the straits of highly charged emotional rivers.

Nessus Square Uranus, Orb: 3 deg. 30 min.

You can't force others to do it for you. No matter how much pressure you exert, they cannot provide you with that warm, fuzzy feeling inside. Whether talking about the illuminating glow of success or the feeling of success in intimate love bonding, it's the same deal. The reaction is yours. No one else can generate that. Granted, they might contribute something significant. How you respond is how you respond. The key to happiness in life - in love - in work - is how you respond. Looks like a response system that supports your greatest needs and desires would be about right. Some assessment of what those needs are helps. Wanting to feel exactly like someone you observe as being content might be a set up for failure. Perhaps having what they're having might not ring your personal chime. Take a moment. Figure out what you really want. Chime in with a resonant tone of appeal without discord. Deal only with those people responding favorably. Forcing the fit of your needs on to unwilling sorts not only impinges on their freedom, it limits your freest expression of joy as well. Without forcing yourself, relax and settle into the world of satisfaction.

Asbolus

Ever have one of those moments in which you went against the flash of insight you received? Such situations become more glaring if life tosses back some sort of difficulty, like exactly the one of which you were forewarned. When you feel like leading the charge up some sort of symbolic mountain to take on a perilous task, do you ever ponder what the outcome might be?

Asbolus, another of our Centaur guides, represents the best in intuitive awareness. Asbolus reflects good counsel given and not heeded, or good advice received and not heeded. Usually the results of not heeding such input become immediately apparent. The urge to veto one of those insightful flashes falls under the visionary gaze of Asbolus. The insight just seemed to be a logical projection. There was nothing psychic about it. "What are the odds of that," Asbolus nudges again. The odds seem high at the moment. He urges absolute attentiveness to futuristic impressions. Stop while you're ahead. No need to take on challenges from an unnecessary argument or death-defying tasks, or push your personal limits. Back off, relax and contemplate.

Asbolus further represents the loss of guidance or wisdom because of alcohol. He points out how judgment, physical and otherwise, degrades when intoxicated. His alternative would suggest that when life feels all-consuming, reinvoke a ceremonial situation to clear the mind. This effort restores strong judgment that supports the spirit and reinstates the intuitive faculties to full potency. Regardless, following intuition remains his determined influence.

Asbolus Opposition Moon, Orb: 1 deg. 58 min.

As soon as you sense someone stands in opposition to your needs, you fire up your furnace. When someone responds, "No," you push back. Your instincts propel you into action before you even realize it. You find yourself in the middle of an action to get what you want before you come to all your senses. What? You were seeing red? If you were seeing red, maybe read the simple sign. Red, symbolically, presents the stop sign. Halt. Hold short. Reconsider. First, maybe this person can't meet your need. Fine. Maybe they won't meet your need. Not so fine. Fine tune your instinct. You know that if you provoke another person to do what they do not want to do, you cannot relax and enjoy the victory. Need fulfillment comes from natural gravitation. Gratification cannot be forced. Take another step toward repose. Will the needs you seek truly fill your belly with the ultimate in emotional satisfaction? This pattern suggests constant upgrades in your awareness of emotional hunger that serve to bring you closer and closer to feeling the good life. This feeling, by the way, tends to draw others to the edges of your awareness without them being aware of your edginess.

Asbolus Conjunction MC, Orb: 2 deg. 25 min.

Print the business cards. You're in the advice business. Your advice looks like it's logical - but it's not entirely. There are just enough twists and turns on the thought sequence to make it, well, more abstract. If you were to follow these twists and turns yourself you'd be a bit of a consciousness contortionist. That would make you an odd duck. So are you? Others expect you to have that edge of uncertainty, unpredictability and unusualness to stand out in a crowd. This gift gives you the ability to show up at places in which you do not need to participate. You've got that innocent bystander, copious note taker thing down. Keep it that way. Stay out of donnybrooks, demonstrations and melees that mean nothing to you. Given that your sensors work largely through the sense of smell, work to keep your nose out of things that don't concern you. This way you keep your nose clean and your business booming.

Chariklo

In today's world, the term "boundary" defines the receptivity we have to others or the resistance we put up to others. When encountering new people, what is your criteria for establishing connection? Does it work? If you are pushing away people you'd like to have in your life, perhaps resetting your boundaries is in order. If you're experiencing conflict with a friend, family member, co-worker, boss or your mate, perhaps redefining your boundaries would help. But where do you go for understanding these instinctive urges and reactions you're having to others? Help is at hand.

Chariklo, the sea nymph wife of the powerful healer Chiron, connects you with your greater unconscious and soul urges. She represents your awareness of both your emotional and spiritual boundaries. And in so doing, she works to improve all your relationships by clarifying what is and what is not acceptable to your spirit. Your emotional boundary would be how close you permit another person to stand near you, whether consciously interacting or not. It would also show up as your claim of your physical and emotional needs from another person. She further represents your receptivity to the emotional claims/demands of others.

The spiritual boundary carries the urge for divine kinship. Here you seek someone with common causes, inspired aspirations and shared views of the Universal - a real kindred spirit. These separate boundaries may or may not be the same dimension. And they might be different with every person you meet. Chariklo represents the qualities of compassion, tolerance and forgiveness in unlimited proportion. She questions intent and examines motivation in a gentle, curious manner. She encourages you to start with yourself. Check intent and motive. If it feels good, proceed. If it does not bring a warm sense within its midst, then make corrections.

She bears the sacred marriage between body and soul. Chariklo represents the wedding known as the acceptance of one's spirit by the body. She offers soul retrieval and recovery, bonding ceremonies and energetic healing as her clarity-producing gifts. This clarity opens the doors for shedding the light of understanding toward all people. Then, you are clear to become a vehicle of helping others understand their own boundaries by your shining example.

Chariklo Square Mars, Orb: 2 deg. 50 min.

Though you maintain an exceedingly clear vision of how close you can approach another person's edge, you just love to push it. It's not a game as such - it's more of an experiment in human nature. You maintain that your pushing is innocent, coming purely from curiosity only. The report you receive is that your approach had an edge of emotional invasion. Should you protest the projection, it becomes apparently confirmed. How do you emerge victorious in such situations? Learn when you have achieved all your goals. Let well enough alone. If you intend to gratify your curious nature, do so by agreement. Set up experiments. Listen carefully to the feedback you get about how your energy feels. You know what you intend to radiate. You do not know how others perceive it. You might claim mellowness and tranquility. Others feel you're edgy and confronting. Knowing how your energy gets taken helps you define effective assertiveness. You may assert your energetic boundaries in any way you wish. And others possess an equal right to respond as they choose. Contemplate your perfect personal fulcrum of favored energy.

Chariklo Trine Asc., Orb: 0 deg. 12 min.

You sense external energy at a greater distance from its source than most folks. This makes you appear extra-sensitive emotionally, but it's a matter of feeling the density of energy. You immediately know which energy attracts you. And you feel the repelling pushes that uncomfortable energy exerts upon you. Masterfully, you find two incredible ways of tapping into the energies you're inclined to lean against for warmth. First, you feed on these energies to inspire your mind. Some energy fires up the philosophical furnace to mid-winter stoking. You absorb other parts of the vibrations to nurture your curious creativity. You discover new talents by riding in the wave of such energy. Now you've got it. It's about juice. Juice is the flow of unlimited creative energy that gets freely spread when its source is realized as inexhaustible. Secondly, you know this energy remains inexhaustible as long as you are alive. So you extend a bit more. Others respond, sending you more good vibes that you look forward to engaging. Fact is, you probably can't wait for your next energetic engagement. If you could only bottle this. The next best thing would be to show how it works.

Chariklo Quincunx MC, Orb: 1 deg. 41 min.

Your career as healer, interpersonal arbitrator or ombudsman summons your full and undivided energy. You going to show up? Of course you are. You can pretend you're not equipped to do so. This probably asks for unnecessary energy investments from those you believe should offer you more support in life. You can also proclaim you do not want this task. Others tire of this very quickly if that matters to you. They know, as do you, that the fit is a perfect professional destiny match up. If you do it, all things get better. What's not to like? If you try it, you'll like it. Same is true with your energy. Define what kind of emanations you've been emitting about your profession. If you wouldn't want to sit next to someone on the train to work with those kinds of vibes, make a serious and immediate repair. The sooner you comply with the fates that call your energy to its pre-chosen career, the better things will be. If it still seems alien, go see one of what you think you should become to engage in their services. To be a healer, go see one.

Hylonome

When losses of life, failures or those things not attained override one's sense of hope, the Centaur Hylonome receives a request for appearance. Should the fiscal losses and relational despair feel overwhelming, call out to this feminine Centaur. When distraught over the ending of a relationship in which you had no control over the outcome, use Hylonome.

Hylonome lost her mate during a Centaurian debacle. She was so distressed and unwilling to cope after his death, that she thrust herself on the spear that killed him. So, she appears in our lives not as an indication of hopelessness, but to provide the will to overcome the mountain of insurmountable grief. She appears to provide hope in the darkness of loss. She encourages grief, howsoever painful. She promises that if you let yourself feel the scary feelings of personal, emotionally thick endings, that you will, in time, feel relief.

Whether consciously or not, persons with strong Hylonome aspects function as grief counselors. They offer hope and encouragement to all downtrodden sorts. Of course, to be able to render such precise care, they first must have shed the negativity of all losses perceived in their own life first. These people encourage rebuilding of self-esteem, repair diminished egos and point out a healthy spiritual self-sufficiency.

Hylonome Sextile Venus, Orb: 0 deg. 20 min.

An amazing thing you do is offer polarity to the reactions people have about significant losses in their life. You slice through subjective assumptions of emotional meaning with crisp interrogation. You'll ask something like, "How do you know when s/he left that's what they were feeling?" Or, "How do you know you were rejected?" You're really good at bringing to the surface heresy and assumption, rendering it inadmissible to the jury judging one's self worth. Your skill helps others pick up the pieces of pulverized self-esteem. You prevent rebounds with these insights. You help others verify their continuing relational worth. Give out tons of compliments with no real reason for doing so. You never know when you add just the right amount of lift for someone feeling low. Comments about basic physical traits, appearance, dress and simple personality attributes go a long way in soothing insecure rips in an aura. You never know what good you'll create. This, by the way, makes you a good person. Being a good person puts you in the sights of others seeking to give compliments. Of course dealing with compliments is part of your second nature. Got a second?

Section II: The Black Holes

Black holes offer one of the most compelling mysteries of modern astrophysics, and as a result, to modern astrology as well. These powerful enigmas maintain a relatively constant position in space. When in contact to a natal horoscope either to the Earth based geocentric (the more common system which can be measured either in the tropical or Vedic/sidereal systems) or the Sun centered heliocentric chart, they fill in a huge missing piece of traditional astrological interpretation. Black holes often add a dimension to either the psychological or spiritual profile of the birth chart.

Most simply, a black hole is the result of a decaying star. When the star wanes it exceeds a proper proportion of nuclear furnace abilities and explodes into a Supernova. The explosion throws stellar matter and debris far out into space. There, it slows and begins to cool. The cooling process induces contraction. Over time, the gas and matter collapses back toward what was once the core of the "progenitor" star. After a short millennium or so, the contraction forces an accelerating and irreversible collapse. The star falls back in upon itself literally punching a hole in the fabric of the Universe. At this point, infinite gravity, density of space and compression of time results.

A black hole contains two components: the event horizon and the singularity. These look like the shape of a horn. The inner part of the horn would be correlate to the singularity. The outer edge of the horn's bell would be the event horizon.

At the event horizon, entry into the black hole becomes unavoidable. The gravitational pressure is so intense that not even light can escape - thus, the term black hole. Also at the perimeter time stops. Outside the black hole is time as we monitor it. Inside the black hole time moves in the opposite direction. Similarly, matter can not escape. It become crushed into energy as it falls into the singularity.

At the singularity there is an infinite curvature of space and time and infinite gravitational compression. Everything falling inward simply converts from matter to energy. What matters, literally, becomes lightened up.

Surrounding the black hole, because of this violent consuming nature, the atmosphere heats up to millions of degrees in temperature. This energizes surrounding space causing the emission of X-Rays and Gamma Rays while rendering a blue shift of light, the apparent approach of light to the observer.

It is from these physical images that we derive our first look into the interpretive qualities of the black hole. There often exists a well documented period between the black hole source and the star it consumes. This creates an energy "biorhythm" of sorts for the person in contact to the black hole. While feeling like a physical effect it originates in the person's own electro-magnetic energy field usually called the aura, chi (life force) or basic flow of the spiritual Kundalini energy flow. The pulse of the X-Ray duration affects a person as well. This burst of penetrating energy establishes an attention cycle requiring extreme discipline. In the most extreme black hole players the pulses range from 283 (4 minutes 43 seconds) to 529 seconds (8 minutes 49 seconds).

The X-Rays produce a perceptive, non-judgmental, introspective inner looking ability. Each black hole person has the ability to literally look through another person. The desire is only to see what the other person (or one's self) is all about at the core soul level.

These people warp time and space. They are able to go back and forth in consciousness between varying levels of reality. Known for spacing out, such a person actually tracks information of other Universal Realities. The difficulty remains bringing back the insights. Remember, nothing can come out of a black hole. So a person must strive to record the awareness of another realm into the consciousness, perhaps at the cellular level, so it is indelibly retained. Then the awareness becomes usable in the real world.

The ability to "imagine" future circumstances, events, inventions or even societies goes with the black hole. So does the ability to "recall" what occurred long ago. A person with many black hole contacts standing on an historic site can feel, see and sense what happened as if it is happening to them at the moment. They can also pre-perceive reality, imagine progress for humanity or define a future invention in their mind, possibly "causing" the necessary awareness to create the invention.

The gravity of the black hole, particularly with the Supermassive Black Holes, quickly develops a following. Once an intention goes out to draw energy, attention and resource, a following quickly surrounds the black hole person. Sometimes these people are described as irresistible. On a more subtle level, the person seems to be placed in a central position as a matter of drill whether relating to a work group, humanitarian concern or social sphere.

The ultimate effort of the black hole refers to one's unavoidable destiny or "dharma" in the world. They unconsciously seek to draw everything to them that fulfills the greatest intention for their life. Possible of great impact, the person strong in black hole connections unconsciously aspires to create the greater good for the world and usher in a time of great global progress.

Enjoy your personal journey in these previously indescribable dimensions! Follow your own lead with each awareness received.

You hold a unique view of informational flow. You believe that the data that can flow between humans remains remarkably limited. Unless one or the other is locked on to the Great Satellite in the Sky the mutual transfer of ideas is at best lateral. It is also somewhat narcissistic. This only gloats, "Gee, aren't we bright?" Better you seek the necessary bi-directional flow of information available from the cosmic resources readily available with a receptive mind. You feel the surge of the energy. Then the natural translator system kicks in. The energy becomes thought; thought becomes ideas; ideas become inspiration. This is only half the deal. Now, surging with inspiration you must fulfill your end of the bargain. This stuff is not meant to be shared with others over a brew solving the problems of the world. Hardly. Now you create something, on your own, and render it back as an offering of gratitude to the very source of the inspiration. When God-given information flows through you, give it back. The rest works itself out.

Energy is an ongoing adventure. A drive exists in you to locate the inexhaustible energy sources of life. You seek to stockpile everything you need that sustains you. You work hard to find a program of stabilizing your personal energy. You work with a fatiguing dedication to ensure that money, food and shelter never exhaust themselves. Really, you become a dowsing of oil, if you will. You seek the energy source from the Earth that sustains mobility and achieves objectives. You probably have an instinct for what lies beneath the surface in any tangible concern. Good, the same applies to you. What lies beneath your surface? Drill into the depth of your being to tap the unlimited resources of your energy. While you tend to take a more physical approach to things, energy is an invisible force. We can observe what converts the energy into power, but energy itself cannot be seen. Go to the place in your body, literally, where energy originates. Make sure you sustain that spring whatever it takes and at all costs. That is not a job, it's an adventure.

When you meet someone, especially someone offering either something attractive or lucrative, linger in their energies for a moment - actually five. It seems like it would take a full five minutes or so for your sensors to include all the information coming your way. After that a most interesting thing occurs - you begin to feel surges of chill, warm, and hopefully, excitement in your body. These would be positive clues. These suggest green lights. Bypassing the body sensors in deference to your mentality short circuits the big picture. After the body sensors do their job and despite what your instincts report, you'll need to run it through your mental filters before you have total agreement within yourself. When at the party and you're invited to leave with a possibly special someone, take a brief bathroom break to regroup. When your boss calls you down the big hallway, ask if you can join up in just a very few minutes. Perspective restored, you'll be so glad you did - the breaks can now go your way.

One of the more delicious aspects of your spirit is that of being able to look inside a person and see what they truly can be. Over the course of time you'll evolve greatly in this ability. In one's younger years there is the tendency to look at someone and see primarily the flaws. Perhaps you offer corrective assistance. After being frequently rebuffed, you'll figure out another way. That way is the one of looking inside a person and seeing the latent good. Their potential radiates in your view. You discover that by reinforcing the attributive nature that others respond gloriously. Not only do they respond, they flock - maybe even cling to you. Here your job is to remain conscious of avoiding crutch support. Teach them where the resource lies, how it can be applied and offer a simple, probable first step. You assisted in the conversion of personal potential into pure kinetic progress. One last idea - your love interest is perfect as is. They cannot become your pet project without serious projection.

Your ego believes relationships should be tit for tat. Your spirit drive knows that in any given moment one person is inclined to rise to the occasion of the person in greater need. Over time, these things balance nicely. It's a grand theory. Your only needed checkpoint is to observe the balance in your relationship without making it seem like you're keeping score. That would pretty much unravel the strong ties. The measure of success in relationship comes from the equal will of both parties to do whatever they can, whenever they can, to assist, abet, support, encourage and love the partner. Sometimes, they might not be able to answer the page. This does not negate the merit of the love bond. Nor does it conjure a need to manipulate response above and beyond what can be freely offered. Focus on your proclaimed reality that the energy of love comes through the unfailing intention to express it. Over the long haul this will smooth out the speed bumps felt by the ego. And the soul never loses vision.

Seek to define and maintain a consciousness agenda for all pursuits in the real world. Heavily focus on those involvements that deal with money and interacting with others. This focus keeps your intention running in the clear stream of impeccability. Your spirit needs to sense the purity of all things you attempt to acquire in the real world. Money exists so you can do the things that move your spirit. You join forces with others only to create a merger of consciousness that inspires both of you to become better. Agenda intact, you can focus on issues of fulfillment. Most notably, determine yourself to teach about the procedure of creating contentment. It's not that you're an expert in love or money. You've learned the key of keeping the ball of abundance rolling. It's very simplistic - spare no expense in expressing gratitude with great abandon.

The first step of grounding an idea into its fullest application comes with the grasp of the idea. Some ideas may ping and pong about in your head. They might actually hit one of the triple score bells, then again, perhaps not. Your mission in the quest for information comes from remembering that it's not about information - it's about knowledge. Knowledge that comes down the pike can actually be used in hard-core, Earth based realities. The ideas you can articulate then possess application, merit and become seen as brilliant. First though, you must overcome all tendencies to devalue the ideas you're first encountering. Sure they seem far out - otherwise they'd be ideas like everyone else gets. And they seem ahead of their time - but only a little. While on the leading edge you can see that place from here. In a very few weeks all your ideas receive responses of applicability, value and desired attention. If you ignored the idea, there's nothing left. If you captured the ideas, you'll be highly sought to lead, which might be part of your legacy.

Since your experience of life contains a wide spectrum of influences you can relate to almost anyone. Your natural eclecticism realizes something can be gleaned from every interaction and experience encountered. The opposite effect stands equally true. Every thing you touch you season with your influence. A strong temporal sense goes with you. Because you are there, or because this showed up, an organic timeliness must be in effect. Every aspect of life has its season. You determine your potency in life in a similar way. You find yourself at your own personal "You are here," map. You are surrounded by those things around you. Find your point of relationship. Interact along that axis. Leave behind what is unique and different that might contribute to - not contradict - the current situation. Your position is never adversarial. You never oppose that which you seek to assist. Your legacy of openness will be well recorded. You personify including the exclusive.

What you want exists in the real world. If not, make it real. That would be your motto. Examine your desires to ensure you have no negative associations with the outcome. Being famous could represent a loss of privacy. A marriage might mean you cannot properly actualize your career. First, clear any traumatic association of emotional gain. Work on the idea that the natural way might be that of contentment, joy, ease and ecstasy. You do have the energy for all your desires. When something you really want appears, you will pursue it. Perhaps the excuses you render at the moment refer only to the fact that your standards have not been met with what has shown itself thus far. This does not imply it does not exist. It does strongly suggest that you've not spent enough time shredding the falsified documents of belief in your "life never is great files." As soon as this occurs, the new files overwhelmingly stack up in your corner.

An important mental resolution knocks on the doors of your mind's hidden resources. The laws of spirituality do not conflict with the laws of the real world. To be spiritual does not mean shunning your material responsibilities.

Nor does spirituality imply an arrogant disconnection with the facts of life. Logically that would contradict existence on such a material world. Mastering physical reality fabricates keys faster than any other effort. To be the locksmith in your life, all resistance principles need to come forward. These sound like, "If I'm spiritual, I cannot live in this nice house." "If I'm pure as a spirit, I have to give up sex." Integration becomes paramount. Can you integrate physical need with spirituality? If yes, you've got it. If no, then it will be a while longer before your mind links the facts. Meanwhile, the duality and contradictions gain momentum. What is black is white, what is white is black. The bottom line is that both deal with the effect of all colors - one by absence, one by presence. Just like spirit in a dense world.

The operating doctrine you use in life incessantly infiltrates your influence on other people. Whether you show an easier way, describe a new concept or evangelically pontificate, you wield a lot of power with your presence. You might not think so. Others do not give up much in response. They seem guarded and protective of their concerns. Yet their concerns have received indelible imprinting from the images you offered. This is the way it is. Recognizing this feeds you. Denying this reality adds to a diminished sense of being. Learn that subtle does not mean weak. Though something is not blazing, it may not seem to possess sufficient brilliance. Yet blinding light obstructs views. The softer, subtler methods of your personal demonstration might seem moot to you. It's not. To honor yourself abandon your dim view of your natural insights. One other thing, sometimes your sharpest humor entertains people into enlightenment.

Sometimes to focus clearly upon your heart's desire, you need to back up from the objects of your affection. You could be relentlessly focused upon such objects. Your focus could be so intense that it fails to recognize the ability of this object to grant your desire. You could be trying to get carrot juice out of a beet. It simply has no carrot juice to give. It has beet juice, though. Are you after juice or are you craving carrot juice? You won't know until you pause to sample your need sensors. Every now and then you need to take such a review. What do you desire? Has it changed? Sure it has. Since the last proclamation you've either received it or you haven't. The reality produced an emotional response. This response worked to motivate you along the juice line to your current position. Where is that? Does this line end up at a juice bar or not? If not, can you accept what's at the end of this line without compromise? It's already clear from your finite focus that compromise will not work. So make sure you get what you need by looking only in places that have more than enough of what you seek.

When life offers mental overload you know what to do. Think of it as a big jigsaw puzzle. Determine your method of ordering the pieces. You can group thoughts by shape, starting with the borders. You could make piles of pieces by color. Either way you use, systematically assign an unconscious priority by applying such a method. Oddly, this protocol works better than one based upon pure logic. The equivalent would be observing the lines of layers of rock simply noting natural, evolution efforts over eons. You could check out the simplicity of nature. Your goal seeks out a vehicle of clarity in problem solving. The clarity comes from letting the factors at hand guide you as to where you need to focus your attentions and when. The focus of attention is nothing more than steering the energy of thought. Such steering far exceeds the frantic reaction of stampeding your way through a prairie of mentally untraversable terrain.

Practical intelligence is what it's all about. Learning everything there is to know about something means nothing if not applied. Having multiple doctorates offers nothing to your world if you don't figure a way of utilization. You remain one of those odd people who pursues a highly specified degree in a tough field. Then you turn about and do something entirely unrelated. One must assume that in the halls of academia you discovered your true meaning. You're likely to express a hair trigger sense of constriction about careers. You'll likely find yourself bi-vocational at first. You'll hold a bread earning job and energetically cultivate an avid interest to professional income standards. You may even have up to three careers going at any one time. One thing does offer you peace of mind: You are free and encouraged to change careers anytime you feel it best serves your spirit to do so. It might be advisable to consult with or share your ideas with those spirits dependent upon your income - if any - before you do so.
